Course modules

MSc Accounting and Finance

For ACCA passed finalist or qualified accountant.

Upon successful completion of the following modules you will be awarded a Masters degree.

Modules

- methods of enquiry
- international consultancy project 1
- research methods
- dissertation

Module information

Methods of enquiry

This module enables you to acquire analytical and technical research and consultancy skills. You develop knowledge and a reflective understanding of methodological and philosophical issues in research and consultancy with specific reference to finance.

International consultancy project 1

This module introduces you to the process, theories and approaches to consultancy. You gain work experience from working for a sponsoring firm on a focused live international market research and development problem requiring consultancy assistance. By placing you into a live company environment you can apply the theoretical and conceptual knowledge developed within the course. It also improves your skills in cross-cultural communication and teamwork.

Research methods

This module develops your abilities to critically evaluate and appraise published research and develop your own research skills. It provides the key steps in developing your understanding of the nature of the postgraduate dissertation and approaches to undertaking one. On completion of the module you will be able to formulate and undertake your own research project.

Dissertation

The dissertation provides an invaluable opportunity for you to undertake a major research -based project on a topic relevant to your future career development or your academic interest in a subject. The dissertation gives you the opportunity to demonstrate the skills and knowledge you have gained on your masters course and develop research skills.
