Apna Haq supports black and minority ethnic (BME) women and girls who are experiencing any form of violence against women and girls (VAWG). The service offers long-term support to help women heal from the trauma of abuse and make the transition from crisis situations to safe, independent, violence-free lives.

Students work alongside experienced staff and volunteers to support women and girls who access the service. They have the opportunity to experience processes such as risk assessment, planning and interventions with girls and women. They also have the opportunity to experience collaborative working within a wide range of services and professionals.
