What is St Luke's hospice?

We look after people over 18 from across the Sheffield region, with all kinds of terminal illnesses, including end stage neurological, heart, kidney and lung conditions, cancer and AIDS. Each year, we help around 1,600 patients – some of them come to the hospice but many more are looked after at home by our team of community nurses, who help treat and alleviate pain, support and counsel and in some cases, help patients to die at home, if that's what they want. Most people want to die at home, and we help to enable that to happen if we can. It's not just patients that we help either – we extend support, counselling and practical help to family members too.

Here at the hospice, at any one time we're caring for 20 patients in our In Patient Centre – 400 in any one year. Meanwhile, at any one time throughout the city our 17 community nurses are caring for around 400 patients in their own homes – around 1,400 every year.

And every year individual programs of therapies, treatments and advice at our Acute Intervention Day Centre help some 350 patients to live independently at home for as long as possible.

Each year, our work touches the lives of around 5,000 people.

The people with terminal illness we care for have more need than ever to make the most of every moment. While every patient is as different as the care they will receive, they all have this in common: their care will be about life.

St Luke's is not somewhere people come to wait to die. St Luke's is about living.
